Westhaven Capital agrees to acquire Norwell Aerospace Components from Bridgepoint

New York and London — 6 November 2025 — Westhaven Capital ("Westhaven"), a global alternative asset manager with approximately USD 320 billion in assets under management, today announced that it has agreed to acquire Norwell Aerospace Components ("Norwell" or "the Company") from Bridgepoint, the international investment company. Financial terms were not disclosed, although press reports have suggested an enterprise value of approximately USD 2.4 billion.

Norwell, headquartered in Cleveland, Ohio, is a leading manufacturer of structural composite components and titanium machined parts used in commercial aerospace, defense, and space applications. The Company operates eight manufacturing facilities across the United States and Mexico and employs approximately 3,200 people. Norwell counts the major commercial aircraft original equipment manufacturers and the leading US defense primes among its long-standing customers.

"Norwell is exactly the type of mission-critical industrial asset that fits our long-standing commitment to investing in companies that play essential roles in the global economy," said Margaret Yu, Senior Managing Director and Co-Head of Westhaven's Industrials Strategy. "We are excited to partner with the Norwell management team to support continued growth and capability expansion through the next phase of the Company's development."

Norwell has grown revenue at a compound annual rate of approximately 11 percent over the past five years, benefiting from the post-pandemic recovery in commercial aerospace build rates and from sustained strength in defense end markets. The Company has invested significantly in new composite manufacturing capability during the Bridgepoint ownership period and now operates three of the most advanced automated composite layup facilities in North America.

"Westhaven brings deep industrial expertise and a long-term perspective that aligns with our strategy to invest in next-generation aerospace manufacturing capabilities," said Robert Maleski, Chief Executive Officer of Norwell. "We are grateful for everything Bridgepoint has helped us accomplish over the past six years and are looking forward to the next chapter with Westhaven."

The transaction is expected to close in the first quarter of 2026, subject to customary regulatory approvals.

Goldman Sachs and Lazard served as financial advisors to Bridgepoint. Morgan Stanley and Jefferies served as financial advisors to Westhaven. Kirkland & Ellis advised Westhaven; Latham & Watkins advised Bridgepoint.
